CHRISTOPHER MEYER // Associate Professor of Management

Meyer has been teaching at Baylor since 2005, but he started his career in management, sales and marketing positions at various high-tech start-up firms, where he developed a solid background in negotiation skills. His educational background is in organizational behavior, human resources management and industrial and organizational psychology. Meyer’s research interests lie at the intersection of organizational interaction and motivation. Specifically, his research focuses on the impact of such motivational forces as perceptions of fairness, emotions and power on negotiated outcomes or the structure of negotiation. Meyer’s research has been published in Journal of Applied Psychology, Academy of Management Journal, Research in Personnel and Human Resources Management, the Handbook of Organizational Justice, and the Handbook of Negotiation and Culture.

ANN MIRABITO // Associate Professor of Marketing

Before Ann Mirabito moved to academia, she lived the corporate life. Mirabito grew up in New York, earned a bachelor’s degree in Economics from Duke University, built econometric models for the Federal Reserve Board, and earned an MBA from Stanford before entering the corporate world. Living in Dallas and then Washington, D.C., Mirabito worked as a marketing executive for Frito Lay and served as a divisional vice president for Time Warner. Mirabito earned a PhD in Marketing from Texas A&M University. She became a Baylor faculty member in 2007 and started teaching the EMBA program in 2016. Mirabito’s research has been published in the Harvard Business Review as well as top medical journals. Why does she love teaching at Baylor? “What I love about Baylor is the dual focus on teaching and research,” she said. “It’s exciting to be in an environment where colleagues value teaching, and I like the support we have for research-research that is both scholarly and applicable.”
