Master of Public Health and Master of Athletic Training Students Collaborated to Examine Community Public Health Issues

As a part of a weekend long immersion for the online Master of Public Health students, the Master of Athletic Training students were invited to participate in creating a cross-community coalition and present a case to receive “funding” to rectify a particular concern identified during their investigation. Students from both programs had preliminary meetings and assignments centered around content related to roles and responsibilities, interprofessional communication and the social determinants of health.
