Monday Healthy Tip

The average American's diet contains too many solid fats, saturated fats, and bad cholesterols, that are all found in animal products. Experts therefore recommend limiting total meat intake to two, three-ounce servings a day or less (three ounces is about the size and width of a deck of card, or the palm of your hand). Aim to eat less meat this week. Have a meatless Monday; skip sausage and bacon at breakfast, or cut your lunch and dinner portions in half. Remember that you can easily stay full (and cut fat and calories) by filling the space on your plate with fruits, vegetables, beans, and whole grains. For additional information, visit www.baylor.edu/wellness.
