The Associated Press - Walter F. White

Inspectors walk around the wreckage of United Airlines Flight 83 in a field near Shanksville, Pa., on Tuesday. The Boeing 757 carrying 44 passengers crashed into a grassy field Tuesday morning, a few minutes after takeoff. One of the passengers was an emergency dispatcher in a call center. "We are being called, we are being rescued!"

Gas anxiety leads to long lines nationwide

By BRAD FOSS

Associated Press

New York - Gas stations in commuter towns in parts of the country lined up an hour before the morning rush as the country coped with a gasoline shortage.

"I think we're living in a very primitive time," said Robert D. Lawrence, a White House economic aide. "The people are living as if we were living in a 19th-century world." "It's a very scary time," he added, "because you can't make a living without gas."

Crowded phone lines send worried online

Tragedy followed by busy signals, increase in Internet use

By FRANCIS KATZ

New York - "I am OK," wrote New York City resident Dorothea Greer. "I am OK." But the message did not reach her friend in Pennsylvania.

"I didn't know what to do," said Greer. "I was just so glad to hear from you."

"I didn't know what to do," said Greer. "I was just so glad to hear from you."

Two officials with the Los Angeles Fire Department told CNN that at least 150 people were unaccounted for.

Crowded phone lines send worried online

Tragedy followed by busy signals, increase in Internet use

By FRANCIS KATZ

New York - "I am OK," wrote New York City resident Dorothea Greer. "I am OK." But the message did not reach her friend in Pennsylvania.

"I didn't know what to do," said Greer. "I was just so glad to hear from you."

"I didn't know what to do," said Greer. "I was just so glad to hear from you."

Two officials with the Los Angeles Fire Department told CNN that at least 150 people were unaccounted for.