Abstract	The Lola Hopper collection houses various materials collected by longtime Texas political activist Lola Hopper. Ranging from the 1960's to 2013, the collection consists primarily of campaign materials and items from Hopper's trip to the 2008 Democratic National Convention as a delegate. There are also various physical artifacts from the Texas Capitol building during renovations, and papers, photographs, and items from Hopper's time as secretary for Texas Representative and Senator Donald G. Adams.

Scope and Content

The papers and materials collected by Lola Hopper were donated to the Baylor Collections of Political Materials in the summer of 2012. The collection contains mostly campaign materials from various campaigns Lola Hopper supported over 50 years of political activity, including yard signs, T-shirts, bumper stickers, and a large collection of political buttons. Also included are a large number of photographs taken at various occasions.

Hopper worked as a secretary for Texas State Senator Donald G. Adams during the 1970's. The materials in this collection include letters from Adams and his wife Linda, some office materials, photographs of Adams and his staff, and newspaper clippings. The collection also includes several items related to the State of Texas honoring Donald Adams as Governor for a Day on October 15, 1977. This includes several photographs, some certificates and commendations, stationary and programs, clippings, coffee cups, and the gavel and block which "Governor" Adams used that day.

Hopper collected several artifacts from various renovations of the Texas Capitol Building, starting in the 1960's and continuing all the way to the 1980's. These artifacts include bricks, chunks of masonry, nails, and a light fixture. The stones and bricks have had one side covered in felt so that the artifacts can be displayed, and Hopper kept them out of a respect for their historical value.

Administrative/Biographical History

Lola Hopper was born near Houston and grew up there before moving to San Marcos prior to the start of high school. She was involved in high school student government, introducing a bill to desegregate extracurricular activities such as sports. The bill passed and sports were desegregated after she graduated. Hopper attributes her love for politics to the success of this early effort.

Hopper studied English and history at Austin Community College for one year before leaving school in 1965 to work as a secretary for Terrell Blodgett, Administrative Assistant to Texas Governor John B. Connally. In 1969, she became the office manager for Donald Adams, working for Adams during his time as a State Representative and a State Senator. When Adams left office in 1978, Hopper took a job in the TXU lobbying office until 1987 when she became office manager for State Senator Judith Zaffirini for two years. In the 1990's, Hopper worked for Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox in his Outreach for the Blind Project, then for Attorney General Dan Morales' Child Support Division. Finally, she worked for Texas Mental Health and Mental Retardation in Austin.

After a lengthy career working for various politicians and political organizations, Hopper retired in 2002. However, she remained an active volunteer for various Democratic Party politicians and political causes. Most notably, she was an early volunteer for the Hillary Clinton 2008 Presidential Campaign, coordinating volunteers when Clinton visited Waco on the campaign trail and recruiting veterans to attend the event. She was so active in Clinton's campaign that she was chosen as a delegate to attend the 2008 Democratic National Convention in Denver, Colorado, casting her vote for Clinton in the race eventually won by Barack Obama.

Administrative/Biographical History

Series I. Texas Capitol Renovation contains materials Lola Hopper collected during various Texas Capitol Building renovations between the 1960's and 1980's. Hopper personally took photographs during some of the renovations, including pictures inside the inner walls of the dome and pictures of the statue of the Goddess of Liberty when the statue was removed from the top of the dome. Hopper also collected several pieces of masonry from inside the Capitol building, including limestone, granite, marble, floor tiles, nails, and light fixtures. All of these three-dimensional materials are in their own separate box, mostly wrapped in foam for protection. The three-dimensional materials in this collection are in good condition, whereas the photographs are slightly faded and are in average condition.

Series III. Campaigns contains a wide variety of materials Lola Hopper collected during her time volunteering for and supporting political campaigns. Hopper vigorously supported the Democratic Party in Texas and nationwide, and this series holds many campaign materials she collected from local, state, and federal elections. She was also active in many non-electoral political causes, including denuclearization and women's issues. Her collection of campaign material includes campaign buttons, bumper stickers, yard signs, printed material, and photographs. Among the three-dimensional materials in this collection are t-shirts and hats with candidates' names and messages printed on them. The materials in folders are sorted by candidate's last name when a candidate is mentioned, and alphabetically when a specific candidate is not named. Most of the materials in this collection are in good condition although some of the buttons are slightly rusty.

Series IV. 2008 Presidential Campaign contains materials belonging to Lola Hopper from the 2008 election, mostly from the Democratic primary process. Hopper was an enthusiastic supporter of Hillary Clinton for the Democratic nomination and collected a significant amount of Clinton campaign materials. Hopper was eventually chosen as a delegate for the State of Texas to the Democratic National Convention where she supported Clinton. Barack Obama ultimately emerged as the party's nominee.

This series contains many materials from Hopper's trip to Denver, Colorado for the convention, including tee shirts, programs, bags, backpacks, and the hat adorned with buttons that she wore on the convention floor. The series is organized alphabetically, with the Hillary Clinton materials first and the Democratic National Convention materials afterwards. The series is in excellent condition.
