Baylor Equity Office presents

If You're Breathing, You're Biased

You probably don’t even know you have biases. The problem is that biases are unconscious. As a result, you may be unaware of some of the reasons underlying your actions and reactions.

As an introductory workshop to Building an Inclusive Community, we’re going to take a look at defining bias, identifying personal and potential biases, and considering the effects of biases in the workplace as well as within the Baylor community.
