I write this letter in reflection on one of the most complex and consequential years we’ve seen during my time at Baylor Law.

In the year past, and continuing now, we have endured a global pandemic that has snuffed out hundreds of thousands of lives in the U.S. alone. The pandemic has led to economic upheaval, and amid this, we have witnessed pointed social unrest, and profound political discord across our nation. The human condition is such that these events have elicited both the better angels of our nature (think: frontline health care workers) and the baser demons of human nature (you choose).

In this milieu, the rule of law, and our justice system, have been tested. Our judiciary, federal and state, has navigated the impacts of Covid-19 in the face of conditions, wrought by the virus, that have relegated our free and open courts to working largely in Zoom-world. Amid a health, economic, social, and political paroxysm—including in Texas a reckoning with a crushing Arctic blast and the near collapse of our electrical power infrastructure—our courts were called upon, time and time again, to address and resolve issues arising in this past year in which the zeitgeist of our nation has reflected dissonance that has made the role of the judiciary all the more vital.

I am thankful for the fealty our judges have given to their oath to support our sacred Constitution. Regardless of how they have arrived on the bench, and amid much rancor and disruption, our judges and our courts have not been beholden to any political viewpoints or ideological objectives. Our judges have not held themselves out to be Republican judges or Democratic judges. They have held themselves out only to be true to the rule of law, the demonstrable facts, and the Constitution of our exceptional democracy.

Little note has been made by the media of the toil of the thousands of judges, lawyers, and support staff who each day adjudicate disputes, ranging from the earth-shaking to the pedestrian. In this issue, we look at our criminal justice system in which so many Baylor Lawyers make our system work.

Baylor Law has a long and storied reputation for developing outstanding, talented advocates in the courtroom, practicing the art and science of advocacy before juries and judges. Many of them are prosecutors and criminal defense lawyers.

Several years ago, we noted that much of our efforts in our advocacy program were directed to the civil side, while we had many of our students sharing their desire to work in the criminal justice system in a prosecution or defense role. My faculty and staff colleagues came to believe that our programming in criminal law, while well-supported by our broad and lauded advocacy program, would bear improvement and expansion to expose our students to both the conceptual and practicing, experiential world of being a prosecutor or a criminal defense lawyer.

Baylor Law continues to strive towards excellence and growth in our Criminal Law program. In this issue of Docket Call we share information on our Criminal Law Program, including our criminal law curricular developments, the addition of Richard Alpert and Malcolm Bales to our adjunct faculty team, our Criminal Law Boot Camp (involving many practitioners), and other developments. We also highlight a few outstanding alumni who strive every day to promote and protect our system of justice while endeavoring to make the American promise of equality under the law a reality.

As I watch the world and think about Baylor Law’s mission, I am more convinced than ever that the world needs you, our Baylor Lawyers, your dedication to service, and your passion for justice.

Enjoy this issue of Docket Call.

Dean of Baylor Law
A high-profile crime. Celebrity defendant. Salacious evidence. Emotional, impassioned closing arguments. Contentious cross-examinations. While scenes like this might make for great TV-drama, the day-to-day reality of practicing criminal law is often quite different, but no less important. Whether dealing with day-to-day nuisance crimes or life-shattering violent crime, lawyers in the criminal justice system must excel at communication and client counseling skills. They must be able to face procedural, evidentiary, and constitutional legislative challenges related to their cases. While the specifics vary, the same critical traits are required whether serving in an investigative, prosecutorial, defense, or judicial role. A good lawyer must have knowledge of the substantive criminal law, a deep understanding of criminal evidence and procedure, and a firm grip on the unwavering dedication to seeking justice.

The Criminal Law Program at Baylor Law is distinctively suited to training lawyers to excel in investigative, prosecutorial, defense, or judicial roles. Staffed by some of the most distinguished criminal law scholars and practitioners in the state, these outstanding professionals have an untiring dedication to preparing future Baylor Lawyers with the tools and knowledge necessary to promote and pursue criminal justice.
While every Baylor Law student, upon graduation, will have a familiarity with and basic understanding of our criminal justice system and criminal procedure. For those students who wish to dig deeper—and perhaps pursue a career in criminal justice—Baylor Law offers the Criminal Practice Professional Track and other practical training opportunities. The professional track provides students with robust, deep instruction and training experiences in the dynamics of criminal law practice, enhanced by the nationally renowned, centenarian Practice Court Program. Baylor Law Dean Brad Toben explains, “By recognizing our core strengths in trial practice and public service training that intersect in the criminal law sector, Baylor Law has produced, once again, an outstanding trial advocacy training ground—this time in the criminal law space.”

Students in the Criminal Law Practice Professional Track gain experience in criminal law practice from both a prosecution and defense perspective as well as exposure to the state and federal jurisdictions. The program also provides students skills and experiences both inside and outside the courtroom. Students are exposed to (1) clients and courtroom experiences in our clinical programs, (2) criminal procedure, evidence, and practice strategies in specialized criminal law classes, (3) Practice Court experiences, and (4) crucial perspectives from experienced prosecution and defense attorneys in intimate and intensive boot camp programs. Students can put their classroom knowledge immediately into practice by participating in one of Baylor Law’s Trial Advocacy Clinics or via externship opportunities in a district or county attorney’s office or in a federal prosecutor’s office.

Criminal Practice Special Distinction

Students who wish to obtain a ‘Criminal Practice Special Distinction’ must maintain a minimum GPA of 3.3 in all Criminal Law courses, complete additional courses from the Criminal Practice Professional Track, and complete a Capstone Project. The capstone requires successful completion of Baylor Law’s unique Criminal Law Boot Camp. Students are also assigned a dual criminal / civil case requiring them to conduct a criminal PC “Big Trial” in addition to the standard civil PC “Big Trial.” Both PC trials will be based upon the same fact situation giving rise to a criminal prosecution occurring in parallel with a civil liability case. Students are required to navigate the various legal issues that arise with parallel criminal / civil proceedings in consultation with faculty advisors. Students draft and submit various investigative and trial related documents.

“Baylor Law is unabashedly teaching its students that the legal profession is a service profession. I like that message and I want to amplify that message in my classes by talking about public service, specifically the law enforcement experience. I am delighted to say that I have met many Baylor Law students who also crave a life of service in their legal careers.”

Adjunct Professor
Practice Court and Criminal Law

Over the last several years, Baylor Law’s Practice Court Program has undertaken several strategic enhancements of its criminal practice offerings to replicate real world situations that students may face. Students who want to focus on Criminal Law are now assigned sequential criminal and civil “Big Trials”—where they learn that what works in your favor in the criminal trial—may cut against you in the civil trial.

“We are replicating real world issues in a realistic, simulated environment,” stated Professor James Wren. “Law students frequently want there to be a nice, clean, right and wrong answer. The convergence of civil and criminal issues rarely has a nice clean answer, because your objectives and consequences are different. These consequences are real, and they are painful,” added Professor Liz Fraley.

Recently, thanks to collaborations developed by Professor Jerry Powell, Baylor Law’s Criminal “Big Trials” have incorporated trailblazing collaborations with experts, both within the Baylor community, and beyond, to improve case files and courtroom experiences for Baylor Law students. Retired Texas Ranger and Baylor University Senior Lecturer James (Jim) Huggins has worked with the Practice Court team to help stage murder scenes and complex blood spatter analysis issues. Undergraduate students in the ‘Expert Witness Testimony Course,’ are required to testify during Practice Court trials. Sharing about the course, Huggins remarked, “It is an extremely popular course with forensic students and there are a number of pre-law students that take the course as a requirement or as an elective. They get real experience, in a teaching environment, about what it's like in a courtroom setting.” He added, “It's a win-win situation for both sides. I am grateful to Professor Powell for allowing us the opportunity to give real experience to those who will provide scientific testimony in their future careers.”

Outside Funding Supports Equal Justice

Alicia Alvarado, JD, ’19, provides direct legal services to immigrants held in detention centers and advocates for immigrant rights in Waco and Central Texas, thanks to a two-year fellowship with Equal Justice Works (EJW). EJW is a national program that connects financial support to recent law school graduates who engage in legal advocacy at a qualified non-profit that supports underrepresented populations. Alicia is the first Baylor Lawyer to receive one of the coveted fellowships and works alongside fellow Baylor Lawyer Analí Looper, JD ’14, at the non-profit American Gateways in Waco. Funding for Alicia’s fellowship is provided by the Texas Access to Justice Foundation, with which Baylor Law has a long association through its pro bono clinics program.

Most detained immigrants are unable to secure adequate legal representation, and this lack of representation dramatically impacts their outcomes. Detained immigrants in Central Texas have limited access to affordable legal counsel because of the lack of capacity among public interest organizations in McLennan County. Simply put, there are not enough public interest attorneys to work with detained immigrants in these communities. With the funding provided by the Texas Access to Justice Foundation, Alicia provides direct legal representation to detained and recently released immigrants. In addition, Alicia assists pro se asylum seekers and non-citizens who are going through the immigration system while dealing with criminal charges on their immigration matters. She also works to develop legal strategies to assist criminal defense attorneys to better inform their immigrant clients of the immigration consequences caused by the complex intersection of criminal law and immigration law.
Criminal Law Society

Recognizing the need for fellowship and support in today’s COVID-changed world, Baylor Law students have revitalized Baylor Law’s Criminal Law Society. The Society is a means to expose the entire Baylor Law student body—not just students in the Criminal Law Program—to aspects of the criminal law system through special speakers, sharing resources, and offering networking opportunities.

Recently, the society has sponsored webinars on various important topics including, ‘Confronting Racism in the Criminal Justice System’ with Brazos County District Attorney Jarvis Parsons; ‘Advice on Getting Criminal Law Internships & Jobs,’ a panel discussion with Professor Richard Alpert, Assistant County/District Attorney, adjunct, and Jaworski Fellow, Beth Toben, and Baylor Law’s Senior Assistant Dean, Angela Cruseturner, JD ’02. Clay Abbott, former prosecutor and DWI Resource Prosecutor at the Texas District & County Attorneys Association, recently offered a session on ‘The Ethics of Being a Prosecutor.’

“Camaraderie and the ability to get to know people is especially important for the field of criminal law because I believe, like Professor Alpert, that there truly is a calling to being a prosecutor,” noted Daniela Vakulchik, the Society’s immediate past president and current student advisor. Nicole DeVincenzi, the Society’s immediate past vice-president agreed and added, “I want to provide a community for people who have a passion for being prosecutors or working in criminal law who don’t have the opportunity in their current classes to get that perspective and knowledge or have the opportunity to be with people who want to do the same thing.”

Professor & Chair of the Psychology and Neurosciences Dept. at Baylor University, Dr. Charles Weaver, a nationally known expert on eyewitness identifications, has collaborated with Professor Powell in developing case files and issues regarding the limited correlation between the eyewitness confidence vs. the eyewitness accuracy of testimony—and what that means for future Baylor Lawyers trying cases before a jury. Dr. Weaver and his Ph.D. candidates have served as expert witnesses for a number of cases.

Over the past several years, the Practice Court team has pioneered unique collaborations with experts beyond the Baylor campus as well. Recently, the Practice Court team has developed a groundbreaking collaboration with Dr. Billy James and Dr. Michael James of the Kerrville State Hospital, a mental health facility for people hospitalized on forensic commitments. Dr. James is the site supervisor for UT Health San Antonio’s Forensic Psychology Residency Program at the hospital, training doctoral candidates to be expert witnesses in criminal cases that involve defendants with mental health issues, including appropriate procedures for giving video depositions and in-court procedures. While Dr. James’ Ph.D. students are exposed to a real-world model of the litigation experience, future Baylor Lawyers also learn about the effective use of expert witnesses in trials. Often, the Ph.D. candidates cannot return to Baylor Law for “Big Trials,” providing the perfect opportunity to train our criminal law students on how to preserve testimony in a way that presents well to the jury—for both direct and cross-examination.

FIELD PLACEMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Baylor Law, through its network of prosecutors, offers for-credit field placement opportunities designed to immerse future Baylor Lawyers into the day-to-day workings of a local prosecutor’s office. Every field placement is slightly different, depending on the needs of the local elected prosecutor, but most offer students the chance to build their practical skills in case evaluation, witness interviews, gathering discovery, formulating plea offers, and doing legal research. Students also participate in various criminal court proceedings under attorney supervision. In addition to their work in the prosecutor’s office, students are required to complete specific academic tasks that are reported to Baylor Law’s Career Development Office and their faculty advisor. These unique opportunities help our students gain valuable work experience and build their personal networks that further their chances of becoming a prosecutor after graduation.

“Field placements allow students to apply the knowledge and skills gained in the classroom at Baylor Law in a real-life setting.”

My passion for criminal defense work emanates from my firm belief that ours is an honorable profession rooted in our Constitution and born of the belief from the Enlightenment ideal that all humans are born free and equal in dignity and rights that must be protected. We exist to serve them, rather than the prosecution and/or the courts, and we must always put our clients at the center of our discussions and actions. My experiences at my beloved Baylor Law School—especially the Practice Court sessions under the tutelage of Professor Matt Dawson—taught me the requisite processes and communication skills necessary to serve in this crucial role in our society."

— Michael P. Heiskell, JD ’74
Criminal Law Boot Camp

The brainchild of award-winning prosecutor and Baylor Law professor Richard Alpert, the Criminal Law Boot Camp is an intensive three-day, hands-on workshop designed to expose students to a real-world experience in the practice of criminal law in the State of Texas.

For more than 20 years, Professor Richard Alpert was a supervisor of new prosecutors in Tarrant County, TX. He has extensive experience and a deep understanding of what is required for someone to succeed as a prosecutor. Joining Professor Alpert is an all-volunteer faculty. The Criminal Law Boot Camp faculty is a combination of current and former prosecutors, defense lawyers, and judges. The Boot Camp, over the course of three days, consists of instruction and simulated training in jury selection, opening statements, direct and cross examinations, closing arguments, and arguments to the court. It effectively combines traditional lectures, strategic breakout discussions, and mock trial exercises. Each Boot Camp is limited to 16 students per camp. Faculty work closely with students, offering guidance and critiquing the students’ strategies and their work. Unrivaled at any other law school, the Criminal Law Boot Camp has almost a one-to-one faculty-to-student ratio. “Our goal is to introduce Baylor Law students to the practical skills they will rely on as new prosecutors so that they will start their new positions as prosecutors or defense attorneys better prepared to handle the challenges of the profession,” explained Alpert.

Students have the option of obtaining an additional credit hour if they select the criminal trial option for their major case in Practice Court and attend a lecture on search warrants. After the lecture, they must draft a search warrant based upon a hypothetical fact pattern. The Boot Camp was initially offered twice a year, but demand has been so great that a third boot camp is now offered each year.

"When I was in law school, I felt like there was little tangible support for students who wanted to be prosecutors. My goal is to ensure no Baylor student ever feels that way."

– Richard Alpert
Adjunct Professor

Insights in Criminal Law
Q&A with Criminal Law Professors
Malcolm Bales & Richard Alpert

Baylor Law professors Malcolm Bales, a career prosecutor and former U.S. Attorney, and Richard Alpert, one of the nation’s foremost experts in the prosecution of intoxication related offenses, share their experiences in criminal law.

What attracted you to work in Criminal Law?

Richard Alpert: I entered law school with a dream of being a trial attorney. By the end of my first year, there was no type of law I had encountered that I wanted to pursue when I graduated. The only thing that came close was Criminal Law but even that introductory course did not convince me it was the type of law I wanted to practice as it was almost exclusively weighted towards constitutional issues and criminal defense. It wasn’t until I had a real-time encounter with the profession of prosecution that I understood the type of law I was called to practice. After graduating from college, I spent the summer participating in the Shakespeare at Winedale program. Win Bandy was also a participant in the program and we became close friends. My enlightenment came when Win invited me to visit her home and meet her father, Billy Bandy. At the time he was the District Attorney for Henderson County. During that visit he allowed me to shadow him for a day at the Courthouse. By the end of that day, I knew that this was the type of practice I wanted to pursue.

Malcolm Bales: When I was a kid, my family watched the television series, “The FBI,” and I was fascinated with the cases profiled in each episode. Later, as a teenager looking at attending college, I sensed that I wanted to be like my dad and serve the national interest, just not exactly like he did. As a sophomore in college, I saw the movie “Serpico” and just knew that my service would be in law enforcement, specifically with the FBI. I had no idea how I would accomplish that goal except I had heard that the FBI wanted lawyers and accountants. I had no intention or any interest in being a lawyer; UT Law was the means to the end, the end being the FBI.

Did you have any key mentors or people who deeply influenced who you are, what you believe in, and what you’re committed to in your work and life?

Richard Alpert: Billy Bandy opened my eyes to the career path of my dreams and stayed in touch with me, offering advice and encouragement. I don’t know where I would be without his assistance. Tim Curry, JD ’03, hired me to work in Tarrant County two weeks after losing my first job as a prosecutor. As I was promoted up through the ranks in Tarrant County, he never wavered in his support of me and my goals. He trusted my judgment and gave me the honor of supervising the misdemeanor section for 20 years. He supported my passion for teaching and allowed me the freedom to pursue opportunities to teach and mentor prosecutors throughout the State. He allowed me to specialize in intoxication cases and gave me a voice in the creation of office policies related to those cases. I doubt I would have stayed in the profession as long as I did if I had not had the benefit of working for Mr. Curry.

How do you handle ‘a loss’ (when a case doesn’t have the outcome you were fairly certain it would?)

Malcolm Bales: I have lost a few cases. I was tortured about them because I was absolutely certain that the defendant was guilty. But the jury did not think so and that is all that matters. I certainly learned more lessons from the losses and usually it was my own error that led to the acquittal. I tried to never make the same error again.

Richard Alpert: I won’t pretend it doesn’t hurt to lose but over time I realized that losing is an essential part of the learning experience. No one in my profession would ever respect someone who has never lost a case. My losses inspired me to work harder and to constantly strive to improve. I also had the support of my family. I am speaking of my personal family, my wife and kids, and my professional family. For every setback, I ever encountered there were friends and colleagues who refused to let me dwell on the loss and were quick to remind me that there were better results around the corner.

Losses are something to be avoided, but as a prosecutor, losses can never be allowed to become something you fear. A prosecutor who is afraid to face tough cases can become paralyzed by his or her fear of losing. The best prosecutors run towards challenging cases, not away from them.

What would you say to a current Baylor Law student considering working in Criminal Law?

Richard Alpert: I would recommend they take as many of the criminal law courses as possible that Baylor Law has to offer. I would encourage them to find out as much about the actual day-to-day life of the job of a prosecutor as well. The best way to accomplish that is by way of an internship at a District or County Attorney’s Office. In the alternative, they can speak to someone who has done that job. That person can be me, or Beth Toben, or any of the Criminal Law Boot Camp guest speakers or faculty members. I would tell them it is not going to be an easy path, but the rewards far outweigh the sacrifices made along the way. If they truly wish to make a difference in the lives of citizens of their community, of their State, they will find no better vehicle to accomplish that goal than working as a prosecutor.

Malcolm Bales: I have met many students, and the number seems to be growing, who are very interested in Criminal Law, both on the prosecution and the defense side. Both sides are essential and require lawyers who are true believers in the American ideal of justice.

Hanging out with them in class, even online class, is a pure joy, but I have a special place in my heart for the few that have voiced a desire to become special agents. I know exactly how they feel—part of the law school and yet apart. When I was in law school, I wondered why I was there, but that law degree turned out to be the best “mistake” I ever made.

At a time when the general public has growing doubts about the fairness of the American criminal justice system, would you say that the criminal justice system needs reform? If so, what needs to happen?

Malcolm Bales: The pendulum of criminal justice is constantly swinging back and forth, particularly as to the type of sentences provided for certain crimes. While there have been some outrageous results with innocent people being convicted, I know that those are still anomalous cases. We have not been very good in matching crime, criminal, and punishment—principally because Congress typically believes that if you make the penalties severe enough, there will be a general deterrence not to commit that particular, heavily punished crime. The failed war on drugs is a good example that unduly harsh punishments do not result in the crime disappearing; they just result in a false positive of progress as relatively insignificant criminals are absolutely crushed and the cost of running our prisons skyrockets. There is a pressing need for more data and different approaches to holding criminals accountable than just throwing the key away. That being said, there are very dangerous people in our midst who do need to be locked up until they are no longer dangerous, which is often a long time.

How do you want to be remembered?

Richard Alpert: As a prosecutor who won tough trials, and as a leader who brought out the best in those I taught or supervised. As a Baylor faculty member and mentor who helped launch a generation of the best and brightest criminal practitioners in the State of Texas.

Malcolm Bales: I hope that people will say that I loved God, my family, and my country with great devotion and served them all as well as I could.
Back to School: TDCAA and Baylor Law’s 17 Year Relationship

For the past 17 years, District and County Attorneys from across the Lone Star State flock to Baylor Law to attend week-long Advanced Trial Advocacy Courses to improve their trial skills for felony trial prosecutions. During the week-long training put on by the Austin-based Texas District & County Attorneys Association (TDCAA), participants attend intensive workshops on a variety of topics, including issues of indictment, jury selection, confessions, opening statement strategies, direct and cross examinations, and closing arguments, among others.

Participants then break into small groups to practice in one of the law center’s courtrooms. During this time, the ‘students’ are recorded and critiqued on their skills. Highly experienced prosecutors and judges serve as faculty during the week, while local police officers and staff from the McLennan County District Attorney’s Office act the part of witnesses. Local residents serve as jury members or for voir dire exercises.

“The partnership between the TDCAA and Baylor Law is a long-running one of which we are proud,” said Baylor Law Dean Brad Toben. “Given that our own program is marked by such a high-profile reputation in advocacy education and training, this partnership is a natural one. We are honored to provide a host venue for these public servant prosecutors, especially as they hone their trial skills,” he said.

Every year, the TDCAA course focuses on a different aspect of felony trials. Homicide, narcotics, sexual assaults, child abuse, and appellate arguments are just a few of the intensive sessions that TDCAA has hosted.

International Criminal Law Externship

In 2018, Professor Brian Serr began a pilot ‘international externship’ with Undikumbukire Project Zambia. Also known as UP Zambia, the organization partners with Zambian courts, prisons, and defender services, and now exercises the primary responsibility for defending hundreds of juveniles who are tried for crimes in Zambian courts.

When COVID-related restrictions are lifted, Professor Serr oversees eight Baylor Law students who participate in 30-day externships with UP Zambia. During their time in Zambia, students do legal work under the direction of staff lawyers with UP Zambia. Students meet directly with minors detained in adult prisons, accompany them to court, and if necessary, draft their appeals. In addition to their role in advocating for juveniles detained at Kamwala Remand Prison and Lusaka Central Prison, Baylor Law students work to meet the immediate physical needs of the juveniles for whom they are advocating, helping them access proper medical care, food, blankets, and other essentials.
Hon. Gary Coley Jr., JD ’93, Judge of the 74th Judicial District in McLennan County, has taught the Juvenile Justice course at Baylor Law for over six years. As the juvenile court judge in McLennan County, he brings a wealth of experience from his time on the bench and from his time as a prosecutor and defense attorney. In 2017, Judge Coley co-developed the juvenile law component of Baylor Law’s Trial Advocacy Clinic. Judge Coley has served tirelessly on issues relating to children and veterans, mentoring future Baylor Lawyers, and creatively solving vexing systemic problems in both the judicial system and society at large. Thanks to Judge Coley’s efforts, lives have been dramatically changed.

AN ADVOCATE FOR CHILDREN IN THE COURTS
For more than 12 years, Judge Coley has served as the presiding judge of juvenile court in McLennan County. Until the creation of the statutory child protection court in 2015, he also served as the presiding judge of McLennan County’s substantial CPS docket.
In 2016, after seven years presiding over juvenile and CPS cases, Judge Coley was appointed to the Supreme Court of Texas Permanent Judicial Commission for Children, Youth, and Families, known as the Texas Children’s Commission. Of the appointment, 54th District Judge Matt Johnson, a McLennan County colleague on the bench, remarked, “I think Judge Coley genuinely has the child’s best interest at heart in every decision he makes and that he places the child’s interests first.”

LEADING THE FIGHT AGAINST HUMAN TRAFFICKING
Deeply troubled by the horrors of child trafficking, Judge Coley co-founded the Heart of Texas Human Trafficking Coalition in 2014. The coalition’s trailblazing work, which has been highlighted in national media, has been “at the forefront of combating sex and labor trafficking throughout the state and beyond,” according to Waco Today Magazine.

HELPING VETERANS ON THE ROAD TO RECOVERY
Drawing on his relationships with the bar, the bench, nonprofits, the veterans community, and local mental health professionals, Judge Coley led the effort to establish a treatment court for criminal defendants in McLennan County with prior military service who need treatment for their service-connected condition. With representatives from the Heart of Texas Region MHMR Center, Baylor Law, and the McLennan County Veteran’s Service Office, he led a coalition of stakeholders in developing policies and procedures for the court, now known as the McLennan County Veterans Treatment Court.
As an exemplar of Baylor Law’s emphasis on service, Judge Coley has also been active in committee work for the Midway Independent School District, serves on the board of Heart of Texas Communities in Schools, and is a committed member of Rotary Club and First Baptist Church of Woodway.
Beth Topen, a 33-year veteran prosecutor, and Russ Hunt, JD ’77, a defense attorney with over 40 years of experience, sat down recently with Dean Brad Topen to discuss their interest in, and experience with, criminal law practice.

Dean Topen: Russ, when you graduated, you went directly to the McLennan County DA’s office. What took you at that point, as a new law graduate, to prosecution?

Russ Hunt: At that time I was interning in the District Attorney’s office because I thought it would be interesting. It was, and they offered me a job. I thought, “Well, jobs are good. I need a job.” I worked there for four years. After the first six months as a misdemeanor prosecutor, they said, “Well, why don’t you be a felony prosecutor?” I was a felony prosecutor for three and a half years after that and truly loved prosecution. I just really enjoyed it.

Dean Topen: You each had the benefit of having mentors. What’s the importance of mentorship for a young lawyer?

Russ Hunt: I think it’s fantastic if you can find one. The problem is we have a lot of young lawyers who don’t realize that’s important. They go out and they attack their windmills and do it wrong. Nobody’s there to say, “Hey, there’s a better way to do this.” Over the years, I’ve had lots of interns who have gone with me on cases. My goal has been to help them learn what to do and have a good time doing it.

Beth Topen: I applied at the 10th Court of Appeals to become a briefing attorney. I thought that up there on the fourth floor of the courthouse I could survey the legal profession in McLennan County and see where I might fit. I briefed for two years with Justice Bob Thomas. I loved Judge Thomas and I loved the people who worked at the 10th Court, but I learned that I am not a researcher. There was no variety. You had to work on that one case until it was done. Being somewhat isolated on the fourth floor of the courthouse, I figured out I needed contact and interaction with people. I went into private practice with Jim Barlow, who was a former prosecutor and former County Court-at-Law judge here in McLennan County.

Dean Topen: Sometimes you hear it said that lawyers should not get emotionally attached to their clients or to a case. Tell us what you think about that.

Russ Hunt: It’s interesting to me. I’ve had several clients that say, “Well, listen, I need to know that you’re on my side, that you totally believe what I have to say. That’s important to me.” I always tell them, “What’s important to you is that I need not make up my mind about what happened because if I buy into a story, then I’m going to be blind to the other side. I’ve got to keep my mind open. So, no, I don’t believe you but I don’t disbelieve you either. Let’s work on it from that basis.”
I’m going to be as objective as I can because to do a good job, I’ve got to be that way. Some clients like that better than others.

Beth Toben: When I was in defense work, I used to meet with my clients and I would say, “Tell me what they’ve got on you. Not what did you do, but what do they know or what are they going to tell me that you did.” It wasn’t about whether they did it. We just talked about what the evidence was going to show. It took out that emotional “she doesn’t believe me” aspect. As a prosecutor, I’ll be honest, with some of my victims I get close and I’m passionate. Instead of viewing that as a negative, I view it as a positive. It’s how I got into child abuse cases and how that became my area of prosecution.

Dean Toben: If you were visiting with a law student, uncertain about which way they want to go into law and being kind of a blank slate, what would you advise them to be doing regarding testing out the waters in the criminal law space?

Russ Hunt: I think the advice that Jim Barlow gave to Beth, a long time ago, was good advice. That is if you want to learn criminal law and you want to be comfortable in the courtroom, you ought to start out in a District Attorney’s Office. I think that’s great advice. That’s what I did, and I think it was an immense benefit to me. That’s a great place to start. Lots of people go from the state District Attorney’s Office into the U.S. Attorney’s Office. Then you can go as far as you want to go. You can be the next Attorney General of the United States. You can do all kinds of things. I think that’s a great plan. If you want to stay with prosecution, great, if you want to try the defense side after you get to know some of the people that work as prosecutors, that’s fine too.

Dean Toben: Each of you have decades of experience in the courtroom. Would you do it again?

Russ Hunt: Absolutely, I would do it again. Yes. One case that comes to mind is of a fellow I represented who absolutely insisted that he was innocent of the two sexual offenses for which he was accused. After listening to his story, I thought, “I think he’s telling the truth.” We took it to a jury. When they came back and acquitted him, I thought, “The system is working.” That was a great feeling. I would do it all again. My goal is to do this for 50 years, so I still got a few left.

Beth Toben: Yes, I would do it again. It’s not just the time spent helping victims that’s been meaningful to me, but also mentoring students and young lawyers and seeing them become successful. I recently got a call from an FBI agent. One of my former interns is applying for a judgeship and she had to have clearance. Though our work together was years ago, I’m so honored that I was one of the people she had listed. I see prosecutors who have been interns of mine and they are doing a great job. It’s just so satisfying to know that I was maybe a little part of inspiring them or helping them learn how to do it.

The complete hour-long conversation with Brad, Russ, and Beth will be available to view on Baylor Law’s YouTube channel soon.

Professor Powell Receives Outstanding Mentor Award

The Outstanding Mentor Award, given annually since 2007, recognizes one attorney each year who has consistently demonstrated a commitment to mentoring young lawyers in his or her legal community. Professor Jerry Powell is the most recent attorney to received the honor.

A Baylor Lawyer who has served on the faculty for thirty-five years, Powell has served as the Director of Baylor Law’s highly acclaimed Practice Court Program. He also has served as the Judge Abner V. McCall Professor of Evidence Law, and since 2005, has held Baylor University’s coveted Master Teacher designation, the highest honor granted to Baylor faculty members.

“Professor Powell has shaped and influenced my life in more ways than we have time for me to describe. I would not be here, literally, if it were not for him. He has opened doors for me and mentored me at each step in my life. Words cannot adequately describe my gratitude,” stated Baylor Law’s Assistant Dean of Student Affairs and Pro Bono Programs, Stephen Rispoli, who nominated Powell for this year’s award. Former student and now co-Practice Court Professor Elizabeth Fraley added, “Perhaps no one has influenced my career more than Powell. He taught me evidence and advocacy. He taught me courage and character. He is the mentor I most trust and value, and he is most deserving of this award.”

Baylor Law’s Dean Brad Toben noted, “Few individuals have had such an immense impact on the training of young lawyers as Jerry Powell. It has been an honor and a privilege to witness the work of this master teacher in the classroom and courtroom.” The President of the Texas Young Lawyers Association, Jeanine Rispoli, JD ’11, observed, “Powell is both brilliant and terrifying in the classroom and courtroom. What I can see so clearly is his genuine love for what he does and for helping others. He sees potential in us even when we don’t, especially when we don’t, and he doesn’t let us give up.”

Earning his bachelor’s degree from Baylor in 1974, Powell received his Baylor Law degree with honors in 1977. As a law student, he was a member of the National Mock Trial Team and executive editor of the Baylor Law Review. Following graduation, he joined the Dallas law firm of Vial, Hamilton, Koch & Knox, where he had an active trial and appellate practice with the firm and was made a partner in 1982. Four years later, Powell returned to Baylor Law School to teach, and in 1987, he was appointed the Judge Abner V. McCall Professor of Evidence Law. Powell is an associate of the American Board of Trial Advocates and was appointed by the President of the State Bar of Texas to the Court Reorganization Task Force. He has served on the Administration of Rules of Evidence Committee for the State Bar of Texas.

He has written and spoken extensively on evidence, procedure, and trial advocacy topics and has co-authored two books on Texas evidence, A Practical Guide to the Texas Rules of Civil Evidence and Texas Rules of Civil Evidence with Objections. His first fiction book, a courtroom drama, of course, The Sporting House Killing: A Gilded Age Legal Thriller was released in early 2021.

“Powell has shaped and influenced my life in more ways than we have time for me to describe.”

– Stephen Rispoli
Assistant Dean of Student Affairs and Pro Bono Programs

Professor Powell has also been actively engaged in the Waco community. In addition to his teaching duties at the Baylor Law, Professor Powell teaches adult education classes to senior citizens, helped establish and fund the Doris Miller Memorial, and was active in Boy Scouts for many years. Professor Powell has also volunteered to teach history classes for the local “Lifelong Learners.” Through these classes, Professor Powell teaches senior citizens. He also includes them in Baylor Law’s Practice Court Program as jurors in the mock trial exercises for our law students. All told, Professor Powell has shaped thousands of lives and has had an immeasurably positive impact upon our community and the legal profession.

In October of 2020, Powell was also honored with the 2020 Outstanding Mentor Award by the Waco-McLennan County Young Lawyers Association.

Professor Powell, along with Dean Brad Toben, recently shared their thoughts on the 100th Anniversary of Practice Court on NPR affiliate KWBU’s podcast ‘Baylor Connections.’ Listen to the complete episode at www.baylor.edu/law/PC100YearPodcast

“Whether it was on a backpacking trip or a canoe trip, Mr. Powell allowed many young men, including myself, to step up and lead and then learn from our many successes and many mistakes. His calm demeanor and strong intellect allowed for excellent feedback and mentoring sessions that developed us into resilient men of character who could lead when needed but also humbly follow,” stated David Tipton, Capt. USAF, former Boy Scout under Scoutmaster Jerry Powell.

Grace Bregard finished second, Catherine Helm finished third, and Timothy Phillips and Tom Evans were named honorable mentions.

For the last five years of the competition, the Legal Writing Center has scoured real appellate case files to find the perfect complex scenario that will test students’ abilities to review a modified packet of materials and draft a real-world document based on a packet of information and a brief writing prompt. This year, competitors were challenged to prepare a legal memorandum discussing whether admissions of silence while in custody are admissible in federal court.

“Baylor law recognizes that quality legal writing is the foundation for a successful career in the law,” stated Matt Cordon, Director of the Legal Writing Program. “This year’s competitors have met an incredibly high standard of professional legal writing and choosing our winners was no easy task,” he added.

“In addition to cash awards for the top three competitors, each were awarded an opportunity to interview for an internship with the prestigious appellate law firm Durham, Pittard & Spalding, LLP, in Dallas, Texas. Professor Cordon, speaking about the unique competition stated, “This competition is an incredible opportunity for our students. Not only do they get the chance to demonstrate their legal writing skills, but they also have the opportunity to clerk with an incredible firm. We are thankful to our sponsors for their time and investment in Baylor Law.”

“We are so grateful for Charlie and Kirk’s involvement in not only our Ultimate Writer Competition, but their personal support and investment in our legal writing program,” stated Legal Writing Lecturer, Greg White. “They are the backbone of this competition and their dedication to helping us teach and mentor future Baylor Lawyers in the art of powerful, quality legal writing is inspiring,” he added.

Charlie Frazier, Kirk Pittard, JD ’99, Rick Thompson, and Thad Spalding served as judges for the competition.
William Sessions 1930 – 2020

Baylor Lawyer William “Bill” Steele Sessions, former director of the FBI, was laid to rest in a private ceremony on Thursday, June 25, 2020. He passed away peacefully in San Antonio, Texas, on June 12, 2020.

Sessions was born May 27, 1930, in Fort Smith, Arkansas, to Rev. Will A. and Edith Steele Sessions. As the son of a U.S. Army Chaplain stationed in the Pacific arena during WWII, Sessions proved early in life his ability for resilience and perseverance. Stricken with polio as a teenager, he overcame the debilitating effects of the disease to regain use of his right arm and eventually excelled in track and field and swimming at Northeast High School in Kansas City, Missouri. With the escalation of the Korean War in 1951, he enlisted in the United States Air Force, completing basic training at Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio, Texas. He continued his military service through 1955, achieving the rank of Captain. Sessions received his bachelor’s degree in political science and economics from Baylor University in 1956 and his law degree from Baylor Law in 1958. He would later give credit to former Dean of Baylor Law and tenth president of Baylor University, Abner V. McCall, for encouraging him to apply to Baylor Law—a defining moment in his life. From 1959 until the summer of 1969, he practiced law in Waco where he was a partner in the law firm of Haley, Fulbright, Winniford, Sessions & Bice.

Following more than a decade of private practice, Sessions served as the Section Chief of the Government Operations Section of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., and as the United States Attorney for the Western District of Texas, based in San Antonio and El Paso. For seven years, he served as Chief United States District Court Judge for the Western District of Texas.

Sessions served as the fourth director of the FBI from 1987 to 1993. In 2000, he joined Holland & Knight, LLP where he served as a partner engaged primarily in alternative dispute resolution procedures.

“He devoted his career to the advancement of the rule of law and administration of justice. He demonstrated a lifelong commitment to public service and the Constitution,” stated Baylor Law’s Dean Brad Toben, who added, “He will be missed and will always be remembered as an iconic member of our profession.”

Sessions was a former president of the District Judges Association of the Fifth Circuit, the Federal Bar Association of San Antonio, and the Waco-McLennan County Bar Association. In 1988 he was named the Baylor Lawyer of the Year, the highest honor given to a Baylor Law alumni. He also served on numerous governmental and nonprofit boards and task forces.

Col. James B. Adams, JD ’49, passed away April 25, 2020. Jim was born to Lynn and Florence Adams in Corsicana, Texas, in 1926. At the age of 17 he volunteered and was recruited into the Army Specialized Training Program. He spent almost two years in Tokyo as part of the U.S. occupying forces.

He earned his law degree from Baylor Law in 1949. After graduation he became the assistant prosecuting attorney in Groesbeck, Texas. In 1951, he successfully ran for the Texas Legislature and was elected—at the age of 24. Having then decided to make his career in law enforcement, he resigned from the Legislature in 1951 to accept an appointment to the FBI as Special Agent. Over his 27 years with the Bureau, he served in various roles and locations attaining the position of Associate Director, the number two position in the FBI. He held key positions in the investigation into President Kennedy’s assassination, organized crime, and cold war counterintelligence. After Watergate, because of his reputation for integrity, he was brought back to headquarters from the field specifically to identify and execute improvements throughout the Bureau. He received both the Attorney General’s Award for Distinguished Service and the National Intelligence Distinguished Service Medal. In 1978 he served for a short time as Acting Director.

He retired from the FBI in 1979, becoming the Executive Director of the Criminal Justice Division of the Texas Governor’s Office, and then in 1980, Director of the Texas Department of Public Safety and Texas Rangers—a job he particularly desired and cherished as a true Texan. He retired in 1987—but continued for the rest of his life to talk about the wonderful, dedicated people he had the honor of working with in both the FBI and DPS.

In 1954, he met Ione Winistorfer. Over the next 65 years he repeatedly called their marriage ‘the smartest decision he ever made’. Jim and Ione had three children, James Jr., Elizabeth, and Martha Wolcheski, all three are married with children.

Hugh Edward McGee, Jr., JD ’53, passed away on May 20, 2020. He was a self-made and resilient man who touched and influenced the lives of countless people for 91 incredible years. Hugh was born in Mount Vernon, New York, on December 20, 1928, and was the second of four children of the late Matilda and Hugh Edward McGee. Hugh attended A.B. Davis High School in Mount Vernon where he lettered in four sports and participated in two more. Upon graduation from high school in 1945, at the age of 17, Hugh enlisted in the Marines. After several domestic assignments, he was awarded a Naval ROTC scholarship and attended the University of Rochester. His family relocated to Houston and was recruited into the Army Specialized Training Program. He spent almost two years in Tokyo as part of the U.S. occupying forces.

He earned his law degree from Baylor Law in 1949. After graduation he became the assistant prosecuting attorney in Groesbeck, Texas. In 1951, he successfully ran for the Texas Legislature and was elected—at the age of 24. Having then decided to make his career in law enforcement, he resigned from the Legislature in 1951 to accept an appointment to the FBI as Special Agent. Hugh was a gifted public speaker, he was a consummate host and master of ceremonies, always knowing what to say and when to say it. As a lawyer, he was just as comfortable in the courtroom as he was negotiating a business deal. He also had a significant entrepreneurial streak. Hugh found time for a variety of charitable and civic causes, including Houston School for the Deaf (Board President), Downtown Exchange Club (President), his local neighborhood association (President), and the Houston Racket Club (founder and President).

Holloway went into private practice in 1970 and retired in 2017, after a long successful career. A true Southern Gentleman with a disarming, affable, and congenial personality, Holloway was a true asset to this area. There are so many things that endeared him to the people he came in contact with.
