Over the years, Baylor Law’s interscholastic competition teams have achieved a high level of success, winning championships at the national, regional, and statewide levels. In uniquely-Baylor fashion, our winning record covers a variety of skill sets and a wide range of competitions. Our Baylor Law teams compete in multiple practice areas, including mock trial, moot court, transactional law, client counseling, negotiations, sports law, and others. Bottom line: we compete, and we win.

Baylor Law is grateful for the support that the M.D. Anderson Foundation provides to our interscholastic competition team program (travel, lodging, etc.) through the M.D. Anderson Foundation Mock Trial and Moot Court Interscholastic Programs Endowment.

Further, the Leon Jaworski Foundation funds scholarships that are offered to incoming students who have exceptional records in undergraduate advocacy programs such as debate, moot court, or mock trial and who then go on to compete on our interscholastic teams.

Please join these generous foundations in lending support to our ever-growing and thriving interscholastic competition team program!

Thank you for your continued support!
Established in 1857, Baylor Law was the first law school in Texas and one of the first west of the Mississippi River. Today, the school has more than 7,800 living alumni. It is accredited by the American Bar Association and is a member of the Association of American Law Schools.

The academic year has reached its midpoint at Baylor Law, and the halls and classrooms of the Sheila and Walter Umphrey Law Center continue to be alive with the hustle and bustle of students, faculty, and staff. Amid this renewed energy and, at times, organized frenzy, I enjoy pausing to reflect on one of the greatest pleasures of my work here at Baylor. I love seeing the transformation that unfolds in our students as they develop from “1 Qs” to Baylor Lawyers. Being an alumna or alumnus of Baylor Law is a distinctive title that each of you wears with honor. We are immensely proud of the service and achievements of our Baylor Lawyers.

Baylor Lawyers selflessly provide significant time and energy to their alma mater. Teaching, mentoring, coaching, recruiting, networking, and giving—you do it all. In this issue of Docket Call, we highlight one area of service to the Law School that often goes unheralded but is of central importance to the development of the next generation of Baylor Lawyers: coaching our unparalleled 40+ interscholastic competition teams. I hope you’ll indulge me as we brag a little about the remarkable success of our competition teams. We have experienced dramatic growth in the breadth of our interscholastic competition program and the consequent opportunities our students have to compete and learn through experience.

The achievements of our interscholastic teams cannot be overstated. Their success is due in no small part to the efforts of the many Baylor Lawyers who give of their time and talents as coaches to prepare our students for a successful competition and, by extension, a thriving career.

We also have the pleasure of including in this issue of Docket Call the Baylor Law Alumni Association’s 2022 Baylor Lawyer of the Year, Mr. Michael P. Heiskell. Michael’s fierce yet compassionate advocacy for his clients in his criminal defense practice, unswerving dedication to the Sixth Amendment’s right to jury trial, and commitment to the legal profession and his community are just a few of the reasons he is so richly deserving of this honor.

We’ll also share with you some wonderful photos from the most recent session of the Baylor Law Academy of the Advocate in St Andrews, Scotland, from our unique international juvenile justice field placement in Zambia, from events in and around the Law School, and so much more.

Enjoy this issue of Docket Call!

DEAN OF BAYLOR LAW
Baylor Law Competition Teams Build Upon a Long Tradition of Success
Our Baylor Law interscholastic teams compete in multiple areas, including mock trial, moot court, transactional law, client counseling, negotiations, sports law, and others. Bottom line: we compete ... and we win.

“Our emphasis on hiring full-time faculty members who are experienced in practicing law translates well into the coaching environment,” Little said. “These professors want to coach and are effective as coaches because they’ve done the job and they know what it takes to win.” Not all coaches are full-time faculty. Many accomplished, practicing lawyers and judges volunteer countless hours to mentor the next generation of Baylor Law’s competition teams. Several of our coaches were members of successful interscholastic teams during their time in law school. “They’re people who understand the methodology we use for coaching teams,” noted Little. Little also points out that it is rare among law schools to have a dedicated Advocacy Program Coordinator who has been actively coaching teams for more than two decades. During her tenure at the Law School, Kathy Serr (JD ’91) has coached scores of future Baylor Lawyers in both mock trial and moot court competitions. Many of our current coaches credit Serr, her mentorship, and their time on her teams as the reason they want to coach the current generation of students. “I was on Kathy’s moot court team when I was in law school, so when she called me in 2008 and asked if I could coach a team, I jumped at the chance,” explained Little, who now works closely with her.

“Asking someone to coach a team is a big ask,” remarked Serr. “They give up a lot of their time. Time away from their practice and time away from their families. It takes a lot to get a team ready, and then travel with them to the competitions. Our coaches are willing to repeatedly put that on their plate and are committed to being part of the Baylor Law interscholastic advocacy family because they want to give back to our students.”

Our competition teams also provide a distinctive opportunity to pair seasoned attorneys who have been coaching teams for ten or even twenty years with younger graduates, which assures that our students are getting a wide range of perspectives on the practice of law. Just this past year, David Deaconson (JD ’83) was paired with Mason Dunnam (JD ’19), and Colin O’Neill (JD ’85) was paired with Allison Luckey (JD ’20). These pairings not only help out students but also allow our experienced coaches to pass on what they know to the next generation of Baylor Law advocacy coaches.

“Baylor graduates are truly armed for the courtroom through the Law School’s advocacy and Practice Court programs,” stated Dunnam, who now coaches with his former mock trial coach, David Deaconson.

“Thanks to what I learned in these programs, I was able to successfully try two jury trials within weeks of receiving my law license, including conducting jury selection, examination of key witnesses, and giving both opening and closing arguments. The superior guidance of Baylor’s advocacy team made this goal a reality.”

Over the years, Baylor Law’s interscholastic competition teams have achieved a high level of success, winning championships at the national, regional, and statewide levels. In highly distinctive Baylor fashion, our winning record covers a variety of disciplines and a wide range of competitions. Our Baylor Law interscholastic teams compete in multiple areas, including mock trial, moot court, transactional law, client counseling, negotiations, sports law, and others.

As every Baylor Lawyer knows, our rigorous doctrinal and process classes lay the foundation for legal theory, procedure, and evidence. Advocacy exercises incorporated throughout the curriculum introduce skills essential to the practice of law, but it is during high-stakes competitions that the elements of law, fact, and preparation are brought together. In this academic year alone, Baylor Law students will compete in more than 40 competitions around the country and in multiple internal competitions. Our ability to send out a large cohort of our students to compete at the highest levels across the country would be impossible without the continued, generous financial support of our interscholastic competition teams and advocacy programming by generations of Baylor Lawyers. We owe an enormous debt of gratitude to every one of our generous benefactors.

Baylor Law’s dedication to training lawyers who are fully qualified to practice law, combined with dedicated students who are enthusiastic about winning, often gives us the upper hand in these competitions. However, the essential success factor, or “secret sauce,” of our winning track record is the dedication of time and talent by dozens of accomplished lawyers, professors, and judges who coach our teams.

Advocacy Director Robert Little (JD ’05) states that our coaching team is a singular combination of successful practicing lawyers, full-time professors, and staff. “It is extremely rare to have someone in Professor Larry Bates’ position, who teaches full-time, has been a professor at Baylor Law for so long, who is a tenured faculty member, and who also coaches winning teams year after year.” And Professor Bates isn’t alone. Professors Brian Serr, Laura Hernández, Allen Page, Greg White, Mike Berry, Lee Ann James, and Pat Souter, as well as Associate Dean Pat Wilson, each dedicate hours of their time outside the classroom, in addition to their teaching duties, to coach teams.
Baylor Law Emphasizes the Educational Experience

While Baylor Law has compiled an impressive winning record over the years, Director Little notes, “any school that prioritizes winning over learning is making a mistake.” Baylor Law’s fast-paced quarter system has singular advantages for students interested in competing on one of our teams. Unlike most other law schools, our students can compete on multiple teams spanning multiple disciplines. “In their final two years at Baylor Law, our students have the opportunity to compete on client counseling teams, mock trial teams, moot court teams, negotiation teams, sports law, or transactional teams,” said Little. This is distinctly different from the approach of other law schools. At most schools, students are required to decide what discipline they want to compete in during their first year and never get the experience of joining any other types of teams. “None of our team experiences are excluded from our students as long as they’re willing to put in the effort and put in the time,” said Little. “I think it’s better for our students to get exposure to multiple teams and experiences in the law. I believe it helps them understand what the actual practice of law looks like. Our mission here is not to win competitions. It is to train effective advocates. Getting that kind of cross-pollination amongst the different disciplines is helpful.”

The quarter system adds one hurdle to our teams and coaches, making Baylor Law’s impressive list of wins even more striking. Most law school competitions are scheduled to avoid student competitors’ traditional “exam period.” In many cases, that places the dates of the competitions squarely during Baylor Law’s exam periods or shortly before—yet our students, due in no small part to the mentoring, guidance, and support of their coaches, consistently rise to the challenge.

In addition, the generous philanthropy of Baylor Lawyers allows our students and their coaches to register for these competitions, travel, and compete at no cost to themselves.

The Changing Competitive Landscape

Thanks to the willingness of Baylor’s coaches to share their experience and talents with the competition teams, Baylor Law has increased the number of interscholastic teams fielded to keep up with the growth in competitions that has occurred over the past several years. “There are more schools that want to host competitions. There are different kinds of competitions. There are more opportunities for students to compete,” commented Director Little, “When I was in law school, in 2005, there might have been three or four competitions every semester that you could attend. Now, there are maybe 15 mock trial competitions in both the spring and the fall. So there might be 40 total competitions, or more, that you can go to.” The list of moot court competitions is also long and growing. The options for transactional competitions have boomed in the last five to ten years, and we also field competition teams for client counseling, voir dire, and other tournaments.

“I think what we’ve done here at Baylor is, as the opportunities grow, we just embrace them. We go to so many more competitions than we did even 10 or 15 years ago,” said Little.

In 1996–1997, 25 years ago, Baylor Law fielded three moot court teams, three mock trial teams, one client counseling team, and one negotiations team, with a total of 40 students competing.

By 2001–2002, 20 years ago, the Law School fielded five moot court teams, four mock trial teams, one client counseling team, one mediation team, and had a total of 54 students competing.

By 2021–2022, the Baylor interscholastic competition program had grown five-fold. Last year, Baylor law fielded 21 moot court teams, 14 mock trial teams, one client counseling team, four transactional teams, two negotiation teams, and had over 150 students competing.

Through this dramatic change, the consistency of the Baylor Law program is notable. “We are competitive across the board with a smaller group of students to pull from than most of our peer institutions. This tells a story about how good the training here is, how good the coaches are, and how good our students are,” affirmed Little.

“We’re fortunate at Baylor that we generally get to go to what I consider to be the best competitions in the country and compete at the highest levels in moot court, mock trial, transactional, client counseling—across the board. We are lucky to get invited to compete in some of the best competitions. It offers the best opportunity for our students to see outstanding opponents and to really learn a lot.” Little notes that Baylor Law is trying to seek even more opportunities for students to compete than ever before. “Transactional didn’t even exist as a competition platform when I was in school. Client counseling was very small. Moot court was much smaller, with far fewer opportunities. Mock trial was much smaller. You might have eight or ten students doing mock trial competitively. I have probably 20 plus students I’m going to send out this fall and another 20 to 30 in the spring. There are just so many more opportunities.”

Director Little held nothing back when asked to share about the changing competitive landscape and what it means for Baylor Law. “The number one thing I want anybody to know is we’re doing everything we can to train great lawyers who are competent, professional, ethical, and do things the right way. The consistent thing from when I was in law school and today is being a Baylor Lawyer means something. I think that we’re still doing that the same way today. We’ve grown, but the expectations we have for our students in the courtroom, our expectations for our students in the boardroom, and our expectations across the board have not changed. What was expected of a Baylor Lawyer in the year 2000, I always like to say, it’s the same thing it was in the 1980s and the same in 2022. There’s a ‘through line’ in our program from what Jerry Powell was learning in Practice Court in 1976, what I learned in Practice Court from Jerry Powell and Bill Underwood in 2004 and 2005, and now what students are learning today in Practice Court from Jim Wren, Liz Fraley, Jeremy Counseller, and myself in 2022. That didn’t just come out of nowhere. And so, if anything, Baylor, to me, is about consistency. It’s about producing high-quality lawyers on every level.”

“When our students go into a courtroom or a boardroom, I want everyone across the country to know that’s a Baylor Law student. Whether it’s a moot court, mock trial, or a transactional competition, there’s a way we carry ourselves and approach things that looks and sounds like Baylor. My hope and goal is when Baylor Lawyers—or any lawyers for that matter—sign up to judge a competition and watch our students, they pretty quickly realize, ‘that person went to Baylor Law.’ That is because as much as things have evolved over the last 20 years, we still sound like Baylor Lawyers, and I don’t ever want that to change,” said Little.

2021–2022 Competition Season Review

The 2021–2022 competition season was another strong one for Baylor Law.

In moot court, the team of Lexie Ammons, Michael Tagliabue, and Sarah Megan Erb won a national championship at the Hunton Andrews Kurth Moot Court National Championship, one of the most prestigious moot court competitions that only invites the top 16 schools in the nation based on points earned during the previous year. Baylor Law also won The Elliot Cup Bankruptcy Moot Court Competition and advanced to elimination rounds at 12 of the 21 competitions in which we participated. Baylor Law finished the year ranked in the top 10 of all moot court teams from around the country. “The professors at Baylor Law instilled in me that confidence comes from preparation and from preparation comes success—this is the Baylor Law philosophy,” noted Lexie Ammons (JD ’22). “That mindset has given me a unique edge inside and outside the classroom, and it has provided me with a solid foundation to have a successful legal career.”

In mock trial, Baylor Law advanced to elimination rounds at 7 out of the 14 competitions we took part in and finished as runner-up at the National Pretrial Competition and The Summit Cup.

Our transactional teams competed in four different competitions, won the award for First Place Buyer at the Duke Transactional Law Competition, and claimed third place in the L. Edward Bryant, Jr. National Health Law Transactional Competition.

Our client counseling team won their regional and advanced to the National Competition at the American Bar Association Client Counseling Competition, where they made it to the national semi-finals, finishing as one of the final four teams in the country.

And our negotiations team also won their regional and advanced to the National Competition at the American Bar Association Negotiation Competition.

In college, Kathy Serr (JD ’91) had the opportunity to work in the district attorney’s office in Midland, Texas. Several of the attorneys she had the pleasure of working with and respected were Baylor lawyers. She notes, “Even the lawyers that weren’t Baylor Lawyers in the office spoke very highly of Baylor Law.” After deciding to pursue a legal career, she visited both UT and Baylor. “All the things that I think and hope would appeal to our students today appealed to me back then,” Serr commented. “The smaller class size, the emphasis on being courtroom ready, a practical as well as theoretical approach to the law, all of those things are what appealed to me.”

During her time at Baylor Law, Serr participated on the ABA moot court team, the New York City Bar national moot court team, and the TYLA national trial competition team. “When I was in law school, there were not nearly as many competitions as there are today. We competed in just three moot court competitions. I think there was only one mock trial competition.

After graduation and moving away from Waco for a time, Kathy returned to central Texas and was asked by Professor Bill Trail to coach the TYLA state moot court team. Shortly after that, Professor Jerry Powell asked her to assist him in coaching the mock trial teams. “We were starting to see the increase in the number of interscholastic competitions out there and that we could start participating in.” Serr worked alongside Prof. Powell to coach two mock trial teams that spring, and Baylor Law’s competition teams grew from there. By 2008, the growth in the number and types of competitions, and the number of Baylor Law students participating in the program, made it clear that the law school would need someone to work in an administrative role to facilitate the program’s growth. Serr was the perfect candidate to oversee the administrative aspects of Baylor Law’s intramural teams. “When Jerry, Brad, and I talked about creating this new role that I would have, I needed it to be part-time and flexible. But I wanted to ensure that it didn’t keep me from coaching because that’s the part that gives meaning to all the logistics and everything else that goes into my role. We are blessed with good students, people who are excited about learning and competing, and getting the chance to work with them is what keeps me going.”

Kathy has learned over the years that one of the most challenging parts of coaching a team is to recognize that some parts of a competition are out of the control of the students and the coaches. “Much of this is subjective. There is so much about a competition that you can’t control. Sometimes our students have done everything that they could do to prepare. I think they’re the best advocates in the room, but that doesn’t always translate to a win.” Kathy’s goal with coaching so many teams over the years is to help students maximize the learning potential of every competitive experience. Win or lose. “No matter the outcome of a competition, my goal is to get our students to a point where they feel like they couldn’t have done anything else to prepare. I don’t want our students to have regrets and look back and say, ‘Man, if I only put a little more work into it, would that have made a difference?’ I want our students to say, ‘That was still a good experience, and there wasn’t anything else I could have done.’ I want them to feel that it was a worthwhile use of their time and prepared them to go on and practice law.”
2022–2023 Season Underway

Baylor Law is off to another great start in the 2022–2023 competition season. One Baylor Law team defeated a second Baylor Law team to take both first and second place at the Earle E. Zehmer National Workers Compensation Moot Court Competition. A Baylor Law team was declared champion at the Civil Rights & Liberties Moot Court Competition, while another made it to the semi-final round. At the National Pretrial Competition, a Baylor Law Team took first place and one of our students was named Best Advocate in the final round. At the Best in Texas Voir Dire Competition Baylor Law students won Best Voir Dire and Best Opening Statement.

Throughout the year, Baylor Law achieves success in every discipline and at the highest level, and our students represent the school well, showing everyone what it means to be a Baylor Lawyer.

The “Triple Crown” of Interscholastic Competitions

In addition to sending out dozens of competition teams, every year, Baylor Law hosts the “Triple Crown” of intense interscholastic legal competitions: the Top Gun National Mock Trial Competition, one of the most unique and challenging mock trial competitions in the country; The Closer National Transactional Law Competition, Baylor Law’s demanding, invitation-only transactional law competition, and The Paper Chase, one of the only competitive legal writing contests in the country.

Unlike mock trial competitions hosted by other institutions, at Top Gun, participating students do not get to prepare for the case before the start of the event. The 16 competitors receive their case files a mere 24 hours before the opening rounds. Preparation includes reviewing depositions, records, photographs, and of course, developing a theory of the case. Before each round, witnesses are assigned, and competitors may use them at their discretion during the round. Baylor Law’s advocacy team usually throws a dramatic “curveball” at the competitors during the semi-final and final rounds. In last year’s competition, a complex criminal case involving digital artwork and non-fungible tokens transitioned from a criminal case to a civil one, where a plaintiff sued the defendant for fraud.

Baylor Law’s The Closer is one of the nation’s premier transactional law competitions. Every year, Baylor extends a limited number of invitations to law schools whose programming demonstrates a commitment to excellence in practical business and transactional law training. Competitors in The Closer receive the details of the transaction they will negotiate just 24 hours before the first round of negotiations. As with Top Gun, the tight timeline simulates the pressures of practice, requiring competitors to identify the most pressing issues and devise and negotiate creative solutions that best serve their client’s interests. During The Closer, the student competitors face one another individually in the negotiation rounds, without the assistance of co-counsel or “second chairs.” Real Waco-based entities act as the backdrop for the fictional transactions, adding a realism to the competition that is unmatched by any other transactional competition.

“Each year visiting coaches are effusive with their praise of Professor Beth Miller for creating this unique learning opportunity,” noted Leah Teague, Director of Business Law Programs. Teague also expressed appreciation for the important contributions of the devoted Baylor Lawyers who judge each year. “These experienced transactional lawyers offer valuable insights to the law students as they judge their negotiation skills and professionalism. With each round of the competition, the competitors gain confidence and poise as they use their knowledge and creativity to devise and negotiate solutions for their client.”

The third jewel of Baylor Law’s Triple Crown is The Paper Chase, Baylor Law’s legal writing competition. Open to students at any of the nine non-Baylor law schools in Texas, The Paper Chase is a practice-oriented writing competition designed to test law students’ analytical and legal writing skills. Baylor Law hosts the competition supported by the Texas Young Lawyers Association (TYLA). TYLA members are the sole judges of the anonymous entries. The high-stakes tournament stands out for its challenging real-world writing problem, adapted from actual case files, and tight timelines rule the day. Students have only one week to review the case details, identify the most pressing legal issues, and draft the necessary document(s).
Law school is about problem solving. As Judge Vikram “Vik” Deivanayagam, JD ’93, explains, unfortunately, it’s sometimes missing something vital: the human element.
“When you get to law school, we have a tendency not to see the human element,” Judge Vikram “Vik” Deivanayagam said. “People tell me their problem, and my job as a lawyer is to fix the problem. For a test, that’s great. In the real world, you have to address the person holistically. You have to talk to the person as a person, not as a problem.”

The judge has served on the bench of the McLennan County Court at Law since 2017, and in addition, Judge Deivanayagam also presides over the DWI/Drug Court, a specialty court whose mission is to improve public safety by decreasing DWI and drug related offenses and by holding alcohol and drug offenders accountable by combining judicial intervention, intensive supervision, and immediate, consistent and dedicated substance abuse treatment.

Judge Deivanayagam has also been the Client Counseling Team coach at Baylor Law for more than a decade. As coach for this particular competition, he teaches students the importance of communication and active listening skills.

“What I really enjoy right now is watching young people accomplish something that maybe they weren’t sure they could do.”
Client Counseling Competitions prepare students for the discussion of practical issues, such as confidentiality, fee arrangements, engagement letters, conflicts of interest, professional and ethical conduct, general litigation procedures and methods of alternative dispute resolution. Unlike a moot court or mock trial, where the witness has a script or the case law you need to apply is known, this is more extemporaneous and, according to Judge Deivanayagam, better suited to a real practice situation.

“Client counseling tests other skills that people may consider soft skills,” he said. “But in practice, they’re very, very valuable. As a counselor, we have to be able to listen and at the same time, analyze. We have to be responsive to our client and build a rapport. All of those things are skills that, typically, we don’t test in law school.”

Professionalism, with a personal touch

As it happens, future Baylor Lawyers are good at it. Judge Deivanayagam’s teams have gone on to regionals and nationals “five or six times” during his time as coach.

“Students who maybe aren’t your traditional successful students in law can really flourish in these competitions because a different set of skills is being used,” Judge Deivanayagam continued. “It’s not your ability to recite the law, it’s your ability to make the person you’re talking to feel at ease, feel welcome, feel like they can open up and tell you things that they normally wouldn’t tell someone.”

In hindsight, he wonders if this type of competition would have given him more confidence that law school was the right place for a more laidback law student like himself.

Judge Deivanayagam found his place in law. After graduating from Baylor Law, he went on to private practice with the Law Offices of Rod Goble where he worked primarily criminal defense cases.

He became partner in 2000. In 2007, he became board certified by the State Board of Legal Specialization in Criminal Law.

“I’ve told a few people I’ve been fortunate to have a career with a lot of awards and plaques. That’s great. I don’t need another plaque for my wall,” he shared. “What I really enjoy right now is watching young people accomplish something that maybe they weren’t sure they could do.”

Judge Deivanayagam’s heart for mentorship is apparent. He was awarded the 2019 Mentor of the Year Award from the Waco-McLennan Young Lawyers Association and the 2020 Outstanding Mentor of the Year Award from the Texas Young Lawyers Association (TYLA).

“At this time in my career, it’s fun to watch people personally succeed, and to do it the right way,” he said.

“Client counseling tests other skills that people may consider soft skills. But in practice, they’re very, very valuable.”
When Allison (Szabo) Luckey, JD ’20, was approached to become a Baylor Law School mock trial coach, she was a bit nervous about it. She was just a few years older than most of the students she’d be coaching, and during her time as a student, only participated on one team thanks to scheduling issues and COVID-19 shut-downs. She boldly said “yes” anyway.
“T he students are only a few years younger than me, but I think it helps me relate to them,” Allison Luckey said. “It’s given me a unique perspective because I’ve been there. I’ve felt that. The quick transition helps me relate to them a lot better than if there was a big gap between when I graduated and started coaching.”

Luckey and her co-coach, Colin O’Neill, team up to bring their strengths to their teams. Although at the beginning of her law career, she has the recent mock trial student experience, whereas O’Neill brings the real-life trial experience. Luckey looks forward to bringing more and more practice experience to her teams as she grows professionally. She recently joined Naman, Howell, Smith & Lee, PLLC in Waco as an associate attorney, and prior to that worked as the LL.M. Associate for Baylor Law.

“Yes, we’re preparing to win—we want to do well in the competition—but we’re also really trying to prepare the students for whatever they are going to do in the real world,” Luckey said. “That’s what’s more important.”

But win, they have. In April, one of the first teams Luckey coached placed third in the Puerto Rico Trial Advocacy Competition hosted by Interamerican University of Puerto Rico School of Law.

“I want to see the students progress in their skills and feel more confident in themselves,” Luckey said. “I love seeing that happen. It feels good to have people support and believe in you. I love being in a role where I get to do that.”

Luckey didn’t always know that she wanted to pursue a law career, much less coach mock trial competition teams.

“I wasn’t one of those kids who said, ‘I’ve wanted to be a lawyer my whole life,’” she admitted. “I didn’t make the decision until relatively late. I was a criminal justice major, and I started to really think about what that looked like for me as a career. I had two advisors who I was very close with—both formerly worked as DAs. They actually were the ones who started encouraging me to look into law school.”

With an initial intent to go into criminal law that quickly changed, the transition from Lubbock Christian University criminal justice major and basketball player to Baylor Law student was significant. She shared that her own experience adjusting to law school helps her better understand the students she coaches.

“I think some people come to law school, and it’s not as big of an adjustment,” Luckey said. “But for some other people, like myself, I came to law school and it was a bit of a learning curve for me because I just didn’t really know myself or how I worked best in this environment, and it took me a little longer to figure that out. The earlier you can figure that out for yourself—figure out what works for you and do what works for you to succeed—the better you’re going to be.”

Luckey suggests the students on her teams figure out what works best for them—just like she did and she hopes to continue coaching them well into the future.

“I will be coaching a team here as long as they’ll have me,” she said.
When Winning is a Moot Point

Haley (Mowdy) Owen
When Haley (Mowdy) Owen, JD ’20 was looking at law schools, she wanted to go to a law school with a strong trial advocacy program. Baylor Law wasn’t on her radar but after she visited on a whim, she didn’t want to go anywhere else to develop her litigation and advocacy skills.

“Baylor is known as a trial advocacy school, and that was something that was a huge draw for me,” Owen, who served as senior executive editor of the Baylor Law Review in 2020, said. “But more importantly, from the moment I made contact with Baylor, it felt like family. Once you become part of the Baylor family, you really do have an incredibly strong network of connections both with students and with faculty that I don’t think you can get anywhere else.”

Now, her family is quite literally part of Baylor Law too—she got engaged to her husband Ryan Owen, JD ’20, during practice court (PC), while they were PC partners. In addition to finding love with Ryan, she found a love for moot court competition.

In 2019, her team won the National Championship of the American Bar Association’s National Appellate Advocacy Competition (NAAC), the largest moot court competition in the U.S. Not only that, her team was awarded for the second best brief, and Owen was personally awarded the best advocate award. The prior year, her team won the 2018 Moot Court Competition sponsored by the Texas Young Lawyers Association (TYLA), and individually, she received the second place advocate award.

Owen wanted to coach moot court after graduating, and now, her legacy continues as a coach. Although she is currently coaching just her third team, one of her previous teams excelled to the final round in the Earle E. Zehmer National Workers Compensation Moot Court Competition sponsored by the Workers Compensation Institute in August.

“I’m uber competitive, but the very first thing I want my team to walk away with is that they’ve learned something substantial that they can take, not just into their next competition, but into practice.”
Owen’s coaching strategy is modeled after the Baylor Law coaches she had over the years—picking the lessons and strategies that she benefited from, as well as those things she wished she had learned more about.

“I’m uber competitive,” Owen admitted. “But the very first thing I want my team to walk away with is that they’ve learned something substantial that they can take, not just into their next competition, but into practice. At the end of the day, it comes down to the three goals Professor Robert Little taught me when I was in mock trial: 1.) learn something, 2.) have fun, and 3.) win. In that order,” Owen said.

In addition to what she learned from Professor Little, Owen also holds a special place in her heart for Kathy Serr, Baylor Law’s long-time Advocacy Program Coordinator.

“I would just like to give a shout-out to Kathy Serr for believing in me and encouraging me both professionally and personally,” Owen said.

In addition to her own experience, Owen gathers regular feedback from the competitors she coaches to better meet their needs.

“I tend to approach moot court coaching very collaboratively,” she said. “My competitors are adults. They’re professional, they have a drive to succeed, and they also have the best sense of what they need to be successful, to an extent. I also think it’s important to check in with the team emotionally.”

Upon graduation as a Baylor Lawyer, Owen followed her dreams into big law, where she soon realized she needed to change career directions to get the work-life balance her family needed after she and Ryan welcomed their first child. She found it at Hermes Law, a small litigation boutique firm in Dallas.

“Now, I work remote four days a week and go into the office once a week,” Owen said. “I get to see my daughter every day, and I don’t have to commute. I also went from being a small piece of the pie, to a team lead on about 30 cases, and I manage a very sophisticated insurance coverage docket all by myself.”

After a radical career shift, she doesn’t want to guess where she’ll be in her career in the next five to 10 years, but she does hope she’ll still be coaching moot court.

Baylor University Honors

Professor Jeremy Counseller

Baylor University selected Professor of Law Jeremy Counseller as an Outstanding Faculty Award for Teaching (Tenured) recipient for 2021-2022. Baylor University’s Outstanding Faculty Awards recognize the best all-around professors based on teaching capabilities, research achievement, effective committee service, time spent with students, and civic and church involvement. This recognition is the second time Baylor University has recognized Professor Counseller’s teaching. In 2007, the University designated him an Outstanding Faculty member as a tenure-track professor. Professor Counseller was also appointed as the Judge Abner V. McCall Endowed Chair of Evidence Law by Baylor University Provost Dr. Nancy Brickhouse. The chair was previously held by retired Practice Court Professor Gerald Powell who taught 35 years in Baylor Law’s Practice Court Program, 15 of which as the program’s director.
For the second time in four years, the American Bar Association (ABA) has awarded Baylor Law with the prestigious E. Smythe Gambrell Professionalism Award. The ABA selected Baylor Law’s innovative Leadership Development Program as the recipient of the 2022 Award, following the selection of Baylor Law’s Practice Ready Program in 2018.

While many law schools now have leadership courses, Baylor Law’s Leadership Development Program is one of only a handful of robust programs in the country committed explicitly to preparing future lawyers for effective leadership.

Professors Leah Teague and Liz Fraley, Assistant Dean Stephen Rispoli, and Associate Dean Pat Wilson blog regularly about leadership development topics at TrainingLawyersAsLeaders.org.

John Will Odum, JD ’71, a steadfast friend, gentle soul, passionate public servant, and devoted husband, father and grandfather, John Odum died on August 21, 2022 after a long and noble battle with Parkinson’s Disease.

A proud third-generation Texan, John was born on May 19, 1943 in Abilene, the only child of John Will Odum and Nettie Eloise Odum née Morris. With two working parents, a young John spent many of his days in the loving home of his maternal grandparents, George and Ethel Morris. John attended the University of Texas at Austin, where he was a member of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity, a brotherhood he nurtured until the end of his life. It was at UT where he met the love of his life, Peggy Kurtz, to whom he was married for 56 years. John, who worked at the YMCA in Austin as a UT student, moved with his new wife to Littleton, Colorado, following college graduation to run the YMCA before entering Officer Candidate School in the United States Army. Stationed at Fort Knox, he proudly served two years in the Army, teaching tank operations before retiring as a first lieutenant in 1968. John attended Baylor Law School on the GI Bill and served as editor-in-chief of the Law Review and graduated with honors. John and Peggy moved to Houston in 1971, and the couple welcomed their first child, Jennifer Paige, into the world in 1972.

After a brief stint working for Baker & Botts in Houston, John’s 50-year legal career took off in 1973, when he joined Texas Attorney General小孩. John Hill’s office. During his time in the AG’s office, John served as First Assistant Attorney General and argued in front of the United States Supreme Court. While in Austin, John and Peggy grew their family when son Matthew was born in 1975. A return to Houston saw John become a partner at Fulbright & Jaworski, where Colonel Leon Jaworski personally took the Texas State Bar’s 1976 Outstanding Young Lawyer under his wing. John divided his time between law and politics starting in the 1980s, when he was elected Chairman of the Harris County Democratic Party, serving from 1982 to 1984. That decade also saw John serve as special assistant to Houston mayor Kathy Whitmire and special legislative counsel for Texas Governor Mark White. John’s private practice legal career was marked most notably by his time as partner in the Houston firms of Helm, Fletcher, Hogan, Bowden & Saunders, and Beine, Maynard & Parsons. He ran unsuccessfully for the Democratic nomination for Texas Attorney General in 1990, a historic campaign highlighted by his travels to each of the state’s 254 county courthouses, and for United States Senate in 1996.
