Library Security

The library security includes a set of sensors at the entrance to the library, as well as another set at the entrance to the Reserve Room. When materials have not been checked out properly and pass through the system, the alarm will sound.

If the alarm sounds, step away from the entrance and return to the circulation desk to have the materials properly processed.

The security system does not interfere with pacemakers, hearing aids, or other electronic or computer equipment. However, individuals wearing headphones are advised to remove them when approaching the system.